NAVRAS RECORDS

Navras Records, now in its 10th year, already enjoys the reputation of a highly respected and widely appreciated label and is seen by both the musicians and the listeners alike as a prestigious label with an output of quality music. Navras, which was established in July 1992, has one of the largest and most diverse catalogues among labels specialising in Classical and Traditional Music from the Indian sub-continent.

Navras Catalogue is now available internationally in over twenty countries through the support of our distribution network at retail outlets and by mail order. This Catalogue was brought to the Indian market originally through Navras Records (Pvt.) Ltd. in early 1995. Since December 1998, the Navras Catalogue has been licensed to Sony Music for the Indian sub-continent and the Arabian Gulf countries and is released through Sony Nād label.

As is well known, Navras Records was created as a label with a view to bring out some of the outstanding live performances of classical and traditional music given the predominantly improvisational nature of this genre. Over the past nine years or so, we have published archival and freshly recorded material with these criteria in mind and virtually all the classical titles and many of the traditional titles have been taken from live recordings.

To-date, getting on to 191 CD issues, encompassing some 161 titles (allowing for some double and triple CD albums) have been released. In addition to the traditional classical vocal and instrumental titles, our Catalogue now also comprises of many other sub-genres of this music form, such as light classical Ghazals and Thumris, Percussion and Classical Dance Music, Sufi Music, Devotional, Thematic, Fusion, Folk and Regional Music, Film Soundtrack, and Carnatic music. Notwithstanding this diversification our emphasis and commitment to the quality and traditionality of the genre has not been diluted. We are keen to stretch our repertoire to the extremes of the boundaries within the context of outstanding, traditional music, retaining its indigenous character and its historical, classical and folk elements.

This diversification process has been taken further in 2001 with the release of two more fusion titles and further departures in the realm of Sufi music. “Adi Anant” (NRCD 6002) is an unusual fusion of Indian classical music and a Western Ensemble – a raga based Concerto for Flute in six movements, embellished by Western instruments such as clarinet, cornet, violin, cello, harp, piano, and percussion, composed by the flute maestro Pandit Hariprasad Chaurasia. “Pure Silk” (NRCD 6003) is an Indian Classical – Jazz fusion album by the Silk World Music Group, featuring major soloists Louis Banks (Piano, Keyboard), Shankar Mahadevan (Vocalist), Sivamani (Percussion) and Karl Peters (Bass Guitar).

One of the boldest experiments of the year has been the creation of a “posthumous” jugalbandi (duet) where the music of the King of Qawwali, the late Ustad Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan has been mixed with that of Ustad Sultan Khan, the Sarangi maestro. This is based on the original recordings on Navras of Nusrat Fateh Ali Khan (NRCD 0016 & 0017) and comprising of items selected by Sultan Khan in a tribute album, overlaying with his Sarangi playing and vocal classical rendering, combining original Sufi lyrics with newly crafted lyrics of Hindu Bhakti flavour. Although separated by time and space as well as life and death, the two musical giants are able to meet – thanks to modern technology, first of its kind in North Indian music. The result is a unique duet which had been Nusrat’s desire when alive but fate had intervened before its realisation. The second Sufi title, of Abida Parveen, “Jahan-e-Khusrau” (NRCD 8001/2) is based on recordings at a Festival in Delhi to celebrate the works of the 13th century Sufi poet and musician, Hazrat Amir Khusrau. Abida is accompanied on two tracks of this album by Tunisian singer Lotfi Bouchnak, one of them being a duet.

Three albums from the prominent Gujarati folk singer, Praful Dave, have added a new dimension to our repertoire from that region. “Gurjar Prabhaat” (NRCD 3016) and “Gurjar Sandhya” (NRCD 3017) evoke the mood and spirit of a morning and sunset respectively of the rural Gujarat. The daily chores, country wisdom and devotion rooted in the soil and culture of Gujarat is brought home through the blending of folk and devotional music. “Navdurgani Navratri” (NRCD 3018) offers a lively and popular fare of the Garbas – the stick dance from rural Gujarat, in this case, with its devotional theme.

The Nightingale of Mithila” (NRCD 0144) by the doyen of Dhrupad, Pandit Bidur Mallik and sons, is an unusual fare of devotional music performed in t humri and dadra style. Vidyapati, a 14th century poet, wrote works in Sanskrit as well as in the Maithili dialect in which his devotional songs are composed, most of which celebrate the love of Krishna and Radha.

Pandit Jasraj’s rendition of Haveli Sangeet (NRCD 3511) is outstanding and brings to bear the impress of this great vocalist on the way devotional music is performed. Haveli Sangeet is based on the tradition of Krishna Bhakti (devotion to Lord Krishna). Another title this year in the devotional genre is composed by the well-known Bollywood Music Director Anandji Shah (of Kalyanji Anandji fame) bringing in some of the most popular of Bollywood singers.

In the traditional classical Navras repertoire, we present some memorable works of the legendary Pandit Bhimsen Joshi and Kishori Amonkar in vocal music while an outstanding concert of Ustad Vilayat Khan (sitar), exclusive to Navras Records, is presented in three CDs, including an incredible Ragamala consisting of 14 ragas. Our solitary release of Carnatic music features the doyen vocalist K. V. Narayanaswami’s rendition of a composition of Muthuswami Dikshitar in Raga Shanakarabarnam. Ustad Ali Akbar Khan, one of the greatest of Indian classical musicians of this century, is presented for the first time on Navras (“Peerless” – NRCD 9002). This title, along with one of Pandit Shiv Kumar Sharma (“Twilight Passages” – NRCD 9001), accompanied by Ustad Zakir Hussain on Tabla, are from a series of titles acquired by Navras under licensing from the Swiss-based Musenalp label. This year’s releases also feature three upcoming young musicians of immense promise, Niladri Kumar (sitar), Manjiri Asanare-Kelkar and Sanjeev Chimmalgi (vocal).

Early in 2002, we will release a specially commissioned proprietary CD-Rom product, “RAGA – An Introduction To Indian Classical Music”. This will form an excellent medium through which the uninitiated will be able to obtain musical (audio and visual) and text based elaboration of basic concepts of the music, such as the notes, the structures and varieties of ragas, rhythmic cycles, the various sub-genres, using illustrations from the Navras Catalogue and specially recorded additional material. It will explain in a user-friendly manner both the music forms of India, Hindustani (North Indian) and Carnatic (South Indian) music systems.

The dynamic growth and evolution of the Navras Catalogue will continue. It will be our endeavour to support a wider range of performing artistes, across various generations and sub-genres, bringing to each of these a (label) platform of outstanding quality and aesthetic presentation of music and accessibility in terms of distribution and pricing, including active mail order and internet sales through our and other website channels. Navras is also exploring making its music available for digital downloading in the coming months.

THE NAVRAS CONCEPT

The name of this label has been inspired by the concept of NAV RASA, fundamental to Indian aesthetics as applied to its performing arts, and defined by the sage Bharata, in his ancient treatise “Natya Shastra” some two thousand years back. The concept of Nav (Nine) Rasa (sentiments or emotions) and the Raga theory of Indian music are integral to our recordings. Indeed, our name and logo (capturing the colour manifestations of the nine rasas) are inspired by this concept. A link to the past, a cultural bridge to the present – that is the Navras ethos!

SITAR MAESTRO USTAD VILAYAT KHAN

As of November 2000, Sitar Maestro Ustad Vilayat Khan has entered into an exclusive relationship with Navras Records. Not only this is first such relationship established between Navras and a musician featured on its label, it is a relatively rare, if not unique, occurrence in the world of Indian classical music.

In the coming years, Navras will be the label through which any new material of this great maestro will be released, other than what has already been authorised prior to this agreement. Navras plans to release over the next several years a selection of great live performances, of this genius of probably the most popular and well-known Indian classical instrument, from his earliest performing period (1940s) to the current period, tracing the evolution of this master musician decade by decade. It is also planned that Ustad Vilayat Khan will make some fresh recordings of some of the rarest and greatest compositions associated with his gharana (lineage) making permanent the creative works of himself, his father, Ustad Inayat Khan (1894-1938) and his grand-father Ustad Imdad Khan (1848-1920).

Ustad Vilayat Khan is without doubt one of the giants of Indian music, and unsurpassed as a sitar player. He comes from a family of musicians that traces its musical lineage for seven generations. Ustad Vilayat Khan was born in Gauripur (now in Bangladesh) in 1928 and began learning sitar at the age of three, performing by the age of eight. Having lost his father and Guru when he was just ten years old, Vilayat Khan continued his training largely with his maternal uncle and grandfather, whose specialisation was in the field of vocal music. Since his spectacular debut in 1944 he has consolidated his unique position as one of the most loved and respected musicians.

Vilayat Khan's unique contribution to Indian music is his creation of a new "vocal style" (gayaki ang) of sitar playing – an extraordinarily beautiful and lyrical style which uncannily replicates the fluidity and subtle nuances of the human voice. This style of playing has now been widely adopted by many other major musicians of sitar and other classical instruments. In addition, Vilayat Khan has redesigned the sitar to give the 700-year old instrument deeper resonance and enable it to produce the effect of the vocal style of playing.

Ustad Vilayat Khan has been a recipient of many prestigious awards, notably the title Aftaab-e-Sitar (Radiant Sun of Sitar) by the late President of India, Dr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and the Bharat Sitar Samrat (Emperor of Sitar) conferred by the Indian Classical Artists Association. His film scores include "The Music Room" by Satyajit Ray and "The Guru" by Ismail Merchant / James Ivory team.

About Indian Music

To be able to talk about Indian music as if it were a single entity is remarkable, not so much because it inevitably simplifies an ancient and complex tradition as in effect the reverse: it shows that there are significant unifying principles in the musical culture of a huge subcontinent. What we know as Indian music tends to be the classical traditions of the north and south based on the melodic system of ragas and the rhythmic system of talas. The reality in India is a diversity of styles, functions and instruments embracing an untold wealth of folk and tribal music, the hugely popular outpouring of songs from the 'Bollywood' film industry, a vibrant tradition of sacred chants and devotional songs, and all kinds of shades of classical music. Clearly it is not possible to do justice to this cornucopia of sound from one of the world's most ancient civilisations and largest populations, who, to paraphrase one English commentator, have had time to forget more melodies than the West has had time to learn! The focus will remain on the kind of Indian music most actively fostered and carried to the four corners of the earth by Navras. The company is aptly named: the nine rasas (nava rasa) are the aesthetic bedrock of Indian classical music. They are more than emotional states: rasa denotes a taste or relish, the experience of which, to the initiated, will bring about a state of transcendental bliss. Hearing music live, with an appreciative audience adding its expressions of approval, is unquestionably the best – certainly the authentic – way to listen to this music, which is a reason for Navras' decision to record at live concerts. Another reason is of course to capture the spontaneity of what is largely improvised music.

Indian music is traced back several millennia, and has been discussed in Sanskrit theoretical treatises (shastras) for around two thousand years. The earliest of these, the Natyashastra, makes a connection between vocal music, instrumental music, and dance which has underpinned the definition and development of sangeet (the term for classical music) ever since. The period of history most relevant to the music of today began around the sixteenth century, by which time the focus of activity was the royal courts. As the north had been ruled by Muslim sultans and emperors since the thirteenth century and had absorbed influences from the Muslim cultures to the west of India, a gradual bifurcation, acknowledged in a sixteenth-century treatise, occurred between the northern Hindustani style and the southern Carnatic style. There are significant differences of repertoire, vocal techniques and instruments but the underlying principles of raga and tala remain. Most of the music heard today (reflected in the Navras catalogue) is Hindustani because in India it covers a larger area and population while in the rest of the world it has been promoted by Ravi Shankar and other famous artists, and there is certainly no question of one tradition being superior to the other. In fact, many of Ravi Shankar's experiments, which have become part and parcel of the modern Hindustani style, are based on ideas from Carnatic music, and there are signs of a growing rapprochement between the two major styles of Indian classical music, thus concerts and recordings of duets between artists from each tradition, finding the common ground to make the experience intelligible and rewarding, have become very popular.

Both Hindustani and Carnatic music have a great variety of vocal, instrumental and dance types. The oldest Hindustani vocal genre still performed today is dhrupad. It is a noble and revered style characterised by a sober and devotional mood. In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries it was gradually superseded by the more popular khyal style, in which the singer is allowed more freedom for vocal display and the mood is more secular and romantic. The names alone give a good indication of the difference: dhrupad means something like 'fixed composition', while khyal suggests flights of fancy. Right up to the middle of this century Hindustani music was dominated by great khyal singers, male and female. During the previous century they had become classified according to gharana. This word, from ghar, meaning house, denotes a musical tradition based on a family and place, with unrelated disciples who earn their membership through rigorous training and merit. The gharanas sprang up in the courts and were, to a large extent, expressions of a court's cultural prestige. For this reason they were secretive and highly competitive. They also developed in instrumental music and dance, and they are still mentioned today, although the demise of the princely courts and the increasingly open communication through public concerts and recordings have completely altered their context and made them largely irrelevant. Yet, so closely is the traditional intensive teaching method from master to pupil known as the "guru-shishya parampara", associated with the gharanas that their passing seems to threaten the whole fabric of Indian oral tradition. A kind of standardised music where everyone sings or plays in the same way is clearly undesirable, but this does not appear to be happening, despite the universal availability of the most respected or fashionable styles.

After all, even if a pupil assiduously learns a particular teacher's style, an independent successful career can only be built on a balance of tradition and individuality, of imitation and innovation.

Although vocal music is the heart of Indian music and continues to exert a profound influence on instrumental music, it seems that the latter has become especially popular and thrives as never before. It is perhaps not surprising that this should be so outside the Indian subcontinent. As a general rule it is easier to access a foreign music through its instrumental music than its singing. One obvious reason is understanding the language of the texts. Ironically, this should not be a major problem in khyal, where the poems tend to be brief and of no special merit or importance, the emphasis being on the development of the raga away from the poem. The related tarana is in fact based on abstract syllables with no text at all. Other genres do rely more on the expression of the words. Thumri is very popular at the end of a concert to create a lighter, romantic, yet obliquely devotional mood, typically developing words and associated sentiments addressed to the lover, or god as lover (Krishna). The most important Hindustani dance style, known as kathak, also explores the expression of thumri and similar devotional songs through gesture. The category of so-called light classical pieces also includes dadra, kajri, ghazal, and dhun, which, like thumri, are usually performed at the end of a concert. They have romantic or devotional texts and are sometimes set to tunes which are reminiscent of folk music, if not actually taken from it. Bhajan and qawwali have become real world music and their exponents superstars. Both are essentially devotional songs, Hindu in the case of bhajan and Muslim in the case of qawwali, although their use on the concert stage and in films has diluted some of their religious fervour.

Since instruments almost always imitate the human voice, most of the above genres can be played as well as sung. Instrumental recitals share many of the main features of dhruwad and khyal, though each instrument will also have its own style and repertoire based on its idiomatic techniques. The plucked stringed instruments sitar and sarod have been especially popular for a long time. The hammered dulcimer, santoor, has joined them, thanks to the efforts and virtuosity of Pandit Shivkumar Sharma. In fact, the recent history of Indian instrumental music is largely the incorporation into classical music of instruments associated with folk music through the inspiration of individual pioneers, for example the sarangi (bowed instrument) soloist, Pandit Ram Narayan, the bansuri (flute) maestros Pandit Pannalal Ghosh and Pandit Hariprasad Chaurasia, and the shahnai (oboe) wizard, Ustad Bismillah Khan.

The tabla drums have long been established as the main accompanying instrument of Hindustani music, responsible for maintaining the tala rhythm. The different traditions of tabla playing, known as baj (sometimes also as gharana), go back to the eighteenth century. The greatest players developed an extensive solo repertoire and legends were born. If anything, the tabla has become even more popular of late. Its dazzling speed and exciting rhythms thrill audiences worldwide and on many discs we can hear the loudest bursts of applause greeting the sections in which the tabla player is allowed to demonstrate his skill as a soloist.

Despite the weight of tradition and the complaints of purists for whom the golden age is always the one which has just passed, Indian music is enjoying worldwide love and respect and showing all the robust creativity which carries traditions forward and ensures their survival. Artists are meeting the challenges of the modern world, with its new and bigger audiences and all the possibilities of electronic communication. The inextinguishable old ragas are blended with new, Hindustani music with Carnatic, or with Western classical music or jazz, and musicians are delighting more and more in the possibilities of performing in duets (jugalbandi) or larger groups, and creating new concerts and albums based on a theme, mood or actual story. Recordings are multiplying, enabling listeners to experience the music without having to wait for live concerts (which are never plentiful enough) or to enjoy the memory of those they were fortunate enough to attend.
